TAKE ONE SPRING 1998

FEATURES

6. Quick, Smart and Dubious: The Features of Kevin McMahon

Coherent, poetic and ironic, the films of Kevin McMahon deal with important, complex subjects with thought-provoking style and intelligence. By Marc Glassman

12. Kitchen Party: Gary Burns Returns to Suburbia

The Suburbanators, Calgary's Gary Burns's insightful first feature, was a critically praised report on the state of modern late adolescence, Canadian style. His follow-up, Kitchen Party, does not quite make the grade and proves, once again, that you can't go home. By Craig MacInnis

18. Take One's Top 20 Canadian Films of All Time While some consider lists of anything something close to mind porridge, Take One fearlessly offers its own selection of the very best in Canadian cinema.

PROFILES

28. Mina Shum Drives On After the dizzying success of Double Happiness and with the release of her second feature, Drive, She Said, Mina Shum confronts the "sophomoric curse" philosophically while developing a third film, Fry Girl. By Pamela Cuthbert

31. Giving Credit: The Canada Council and Canadian Independent Cinema From the films of Guy Maddin to Atom Egoyan to Andy Jones to Peter Mettler, the Canada Council, which turned 40 last year, has been an underappreciated supporter of independent Canadian features. By Tom McSorley

POINTS OF VIEW

36. Pete 'n' Joey Have Grown Up. Did Anyone Notice?

39. The Documentary Renaissance Why Canadian documentaries are better than ever. By Rudy Buttignol

FROM SEA TO SEA

40. Pioneering East Coast filmmaker Margaret Perry dead at 91; Les Boys scores big in Quebec; Boy Meets Girl in Toronto; Manitoba's Cheryl Ashton heads the National Screen Institute; Brad Fraser shoots Poor Super Man in Calgary; and will The X-Files stay in Vancouver? Trust no one.
